Parents' Corner

Recent studies show that the average American kid spends seven hours in front of a screen every day. You can minimize that television time and help your young one to build a healthy lifestyle. All you need to do is exercise with them 15 minutes per day.

Get Healthy

Kids who are active maintain healthier weights, have a better mood and attitude, sleep better, get better grades, enjoy more self-confidence, and have a lower risk of developing ADD or ADHD.

Start Early

Parents who teach their kids to be active are helping them build habits that could last a lifetime. Start with a hike, a slow run, or a bike ride. Then work your way up to longer adventures.

Make it a Competition (with themselves)

Encourage your child to continually improve. Whatever activity you are both enjoying, time yourselves or gauge improvement in some other way. Or enter a 5k fun run and train together for the event.
